California School District Selects Teleparent(TM) Educational Systems for Automated Parental Notification System

WHITTIER, Calif.-(Business Wire)-May 17, 2007 - In a move to reflect its commitment to enhancing the collaborative communication efforts between teachers and parents, the Westminster School District has equipped three middle schools with the automated telephone and Internet-based parental notification system developed by TeleParent(TM) Educational Systems.

"Administrators at the Westminster School District understand the importance of parental involvement," said Matt Hartman, chief executive officer of TeleParent Educational Systems. "When parents are informed of their student's unique classroom experiences, they can take immediate action and provide the necessary support outside the classroom to help their children succeed at school. With the installation of TeleParent, this district now has the necessary tools to advance its communication efforts to the next level."

With the installation complete, the innovative communications solution offers teachers an easy-to-use, online interface whereby they can create and send, via the Internet, individual messages to parents about everything from a student's classroom behavior and attendance to missed homework assignments and academic progress reports. A unique feature of the TeleParent system is the ability to translate all messages into one of 22 different languages, keeping the lines of communications open and eliminating any additional barriers.

The systems can also provide administrators a quick and easy way to customize a message to send to designated groups of students or staff; the entire student body or staff; or any other group such as clubs, sports teams, grade level representatives and special needs.

"The TeleParent solution also offers significant benefits to teachers," said Hartman. "Time spent on discipline issues in the classroom means less time on task. Further, it ends the 'telephone tag game' teachers are often plagued with when
